882 drop out rate of Klamath adolescents, a slacking of attention, and a decline 155 in test performance and grades.
156

871 Something of the character of adult Klamath concerns and behaviors has already 156 been suggested. Many work in only a desultory, disinterested fashion, and it is unusual for a Klamath woman to have a full-time job. Thus self-concepts are [461] not so closely bound to job or profession as are those of local Whites. In 434 1953, for example, it was found that 65% of adult Klamath were wholly or partly dependent upon per capita payments for their livelihood. Whereas the reluctance [462] of Klamath women to take outside work reflects the pressures on them to remain in the home and the extent of their responsibilities there, it also reflects the fairly secure economic position resulting from the special benefits of tribal membership. Aside from the twice-yearly per capita payments, these benefits include the privilege of year round hunting and fishing, medical care, loan services, tax exemptions on land and privileged employment rights at the Agency.
[464] On the other side of the coin, outside of the Agency, the principal local employers are Whites, and for one reason or another they are very reluctant to hire tribal members. In historical perspective, the development of tribal income paid out in the form of per capita payments has paralleled the decline of Klamath participation in the labor market. The contemporary Klamath do not work so often nor do they work so steadily as did their parents and grandparents. There are fewer Klamath loggers now than there were in the past, almost no business men now, and fewer active ranchers and farmers.

434 In spite of shifting policies and personnel, the influence of the Klamath Agency 657 officials has been one of constant supervision over and intervention into the affairs of Klamath individuals and groups. The controls over the expenditures of children's funds was noted, and the same controls are exercised with respect [241] to those tribal members who have been deemed incompetent. Yet the activities of stable ranchers and farmers have also been supervised by extension workers, [654] and efficient, prospering Klamath farmers complain that, with a good price decided on and a buyer waiting, they have to await the approval of an extension worker.
Thus the adequacy of Klamath individuals is frequently in doubt, whether by experience with a particular tribal member's high style of living, or by policy.
657 At the same time in many ways the Klamath have been protected from responsibility 426 for their own actions. Payment for debts incurred with local merchants is an example, for the reservation being under federal jurisdiction, goods unpaid for could not be repossessed, nor could income be garnisheed. As Stern and Swanson phrase this situation, the Klamath have attained economic security "attended by supervision."

657 Of course, through constant experience with Agency personnel and policy the 829 Klamath have learned that bureaucratic restrictions may be evaded or circumvented, and they have long since acquired knowledge of the appropriate manner of phrasing a request for funds or services. The Klamath complain of this that forced contact with the Agency has made liars out of them.

648 In summary, little more than a century of contact has merged the originally 177 distinct Klamath, Modoc, and Paiute, and has altered them physically, culturally, 171 and personally. In spite of a small assimilated minority and a large off-reservation population, the reservation Klamath exhibit a distinct way of life 657 which is novel if heterogeneous. This Klamath Reservation Culture is the familiar context of everyday experience for contemporary tribal members. Thus 181 it is the source of what stability and security they know. No matter how variant, or how disorganized this pattern of life may be, it is one whose outlines are the consequence of the thousands of daily decisions, the many lines of action,